Sorensen, Wilder & Associates Introduces DESKTOP SECURITY AUDITS FOR SCHOOLS

Sorensen, Wilder & Associates (SWA), a recognized leader in school safety, security, and emergency preparedness programs has recently announced the introduction of Desktop Security Audits for schools.

In a recent interview, SWA President and COO Steve Wilder noted “we’ve had many school administrators tell us they want a comprehensive security assessment performed, but the money just isn’t there. This program gives them a practical alternative at a more affordable rate”.

Dan Wilder, SWA’s coordinator for school security programs added “most school administrators realize they have an obligation to their School Board, the parents of the students, their faculty and staff, and to the students and the community to provide the safest, most secure school environment possible. When financial resources are lacking, they find themselves forced to try to meet these obligations without having the benefit of qualified assistance. We designed this program to help alleviate that challenge”.

The Desktop Security Audit involves reviewing a number of components that are critical to a successful school security management program. Dan Wilder notes “we include a comprehensive review of written crisis management programs, a review of Safety Committee or other committee minutes that address school security issues, the design and engineering features of the security technology in place, a review of parking and access control plans, plus we do telephone interviews with administrators, teachers, support services employees and others, and we conclude with a confidential report to the Administrator with our findings and recommendations. This is a first if it’s kind program for schools, and we are excited about it. Funds are tight everywhere, but now administrators no longer have to feel that professional assistance isn’t available because of funding limitations”.
